

Towards a Future of Non-Violence: Domestic and Family Violence

Believed, valued, noticed.

A third of Australians between 18-19 have experienced intimate partner violence in the previous year.

But this doesn't have to be our future.

We as a community strive to reduce this statistic.

We aim to do so by challenging gender stereotypes involving all genders and their perceived responsibility towards a culture of non-violence.

Active listening around the topic of non-violence emphasises the importance of leading with an open mind, making sure everyone is able to share compassion, feel valued and supported.

Using empathy, understanding and trust, we encourage new perspectives in the conversation through education.

This aims to create an environment where everyone has a voice.
